

Abstract

An effective and convenient means exists for registering and correlating two or more microscopic images without imposing unusually stringent requirements of accuracy, precision and resolution on the microscope system. Particular utility is found

5 in examining cervical cell samples.